BUILDING FOR A LIFETIME

Brian D. Wiggs Homes, Inc. builds homes for families with their family through knowledge, integrity, and attention to detail that can be felt and experienced for generations

Hanging on Brian D. Wiggs' wall is an image of him as a child, proudly standing at the construction site of his parents' home. It was here that Wiggs became a builder.

"We were one of the first homes in the neighborhood, so my childhood was spent running around construction sites, using the scrap wood to build doghouses, tree houses, and forts," says Wiggs, president of Brian D. Wiggs Homes, Inc. "It's where I made childhood friends and fell in love with the smell of freshly turned dirt, concrete, cut wood, and asphalt shingles."

It comes as no surprise then that Wiggs would go on to spend his career in construction. Whether building roofs or installing tiles, he has worked nearly every on-site job and utilizes his expertise in every project under the firm he established with his wife—Carolyn—now including the next generation.

"When you hire my team, you get a clear, proven path for success to create spaces where every family member has a place to feel good and know who they are," he says. "Our homes have a sense of foreverness—they aren't designed for someone to live in for the short term; they're designed for generations."

THE FEELING OF QUALITY

The quality of builds by Brian D. Wiggs Homes is not only seen but felt from the moment a client walks inside. Alongside cozy and customized spaces, the homes are built with transparent integrity that ensures everything is on time, on budget, and extraordinary.

For a repeat client's dream home on 253 acres, the team created a design that took advantage of the gorgeous property. Although a new build, the home looks as though it belongs to the landscape, with natural materials as timeless as the land it occupies.

"The home is influenced by the client's love for Montana. Reclaimed barnwood in the flooring and beams bring authenticity to the home. We selected stones for size and color that the client wanted but also felt like they came from the land," Wiggs explains.

In addition to pulling items from nature, the team wove in elements of the client's life. Their business in the oil and gas industry is highlighted in the home's open staircase, custom-built out of steel tubing and railing from their oil rigs. Old sucker rods and a turntable drilling bit not only look stunning but celebrate a piece of family history.

"Our mission statement begins with 'We believe that every day we are improving lives and strengthening families,'" says Wiggs. "Home is a place to feel cozy with family, but also to provide privacy to have your own identity and feel valued and important. Reach out to our family and tell us more about your family's dream home!"

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP LEFT: Brian D. Wiggs finishes each home with a signed and numbered plaque to show his commitment to quality. Reclaimed barnwood, stone, and natural materials make the homes look as timeless as the land they occupy. Wiggs stands on a custom staircase featuring elements of the homeowner's background in oil and gas.
